

Nascence

EDITED AND REVISED! Elsa, a 25 year old woman studying in London, is kidnapped by the EXON Corporation and thrust into the world of human experimentation. But an accident in the lab causes her to travel back in time to the year 950 AD. Because of her regenerative capabilities, she is unable to die, so she wanders through ancient Scotland and England until she meets Ezra. An Angel of the Lord who needs her help recovering the Swords of Virtue that have been captured and locked away for suspicious purposes. The angel Reniah, leader of Ezras garrison, shadows their footsteps, desperate to stop them at any cost. Those Swords were created for a purpose: to protect both angels and humans from the forces of darkness. So why did the Archangel Michael lock them away? And werent angels supposed to be different? Why are they fighting amongst themselves? What on earth is going on in Heaven? EXCERPT: Elsa noticed feathers, first, just a glimpse of razor-sharp light, then the halo, perched behind Ezras head instead of on top, as in most paintings. Up and up, he rose, towering before the mountains. He was made of winter and roses, sunlight and summer rain. His skin was that of the light of space and the glittering surface of the ocean. He created wind all on his own, a breeze made of ice and holly, of oak and ash and pine. The effervescent hood, shivering and drifting as delicate as a butterflys wing, glimmered in and out of sight, but always covering his head and eyes. She felt his gaze upon her like that of a living thing, crushing and dreadful, like a hurricane, like an earthquake, and when he moved it was with all the violence of nature; a lions jaws, a sharks bite, a hawks screech. Arms and robe were next as he stretched to his full height and wings sprouted, made of electricity, crackling and deafening in the still air. The hairs on her arms stood on end. Like torn dragons wings, they moved, graceful as a storm, and burned the air, stealing oxygen and light. He was a great and terrible thing, all the force of heaven behind him. How did he not kill her, she wondered in agony. How did such a wonderful, horrible creature not kill her? For surely he could do so with only a thought.
