

Byron: Address at University College, Nottingham, on Speech Day, 29th November, 1910, for the Byron Chair of English Literature (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Byron: Address at University College, Nottingham, on Speech Day, 29th November, 1910, for the Byron Chair of English Literature It is proposed, I am told, to inaugurate in your University College of Nottingham a new Chair of English Literature. Accordingly there has been a question as to selecting some great literary light of England under whose name this Chair might auspiciously begin its work. But why should there be any question? How can there be any selection? For an Institution Grown up almost in the shadow of Newstead Abbey, is not the selection already and automatically made?
