

Beyond the Beyond: Poems to my Beloved Self

The path to God, or to the Beloved, is not an easy path, although it is the easiest path there is. It is wrought with challenges and temptations to draw our focus away from the Divine and to entice us to run after fleeting things, little moments of pleasure. While at the same time, it is the easiest thing in all the world because all we have to do is just remember who we really are. The Beloved wants only this and is 100 percent behind this quest, and the whole universe is set up with that end in mind. This collection of poems to the Self by the Self reminds us all of who we really are beyond our many definitions, and is a guide for us when we forget. These words of love and wisdom inspire and, at times shock, the reader into reconnecting with his or her Divine Nature that is always unconditionally Perfect. These poems were written while running along the devotional path (bhakti) and sitting upon the path of Self-knowledge (jnana). The veil is simply lifting. It is time to wake up and see beyond the meat; beyond the shifting images. And see the Beloved, Who is Beauty Eternal, waiting with open arms.

The path to God, or to the Beloved, is not an easy path, although it is the easiest path there is. In many poems, conflicts of identity focus in imagery of writing itself, where the hand declares she loves her king, my master Better than I love my beloved art. But the poem weirdly directs this imagery of self-creation to the destruction of Beyond recovering the hidden and silent life and death of a woman invisible to
