

Ellen the Harpist

Single. Inept at flirting. But at least she has talent and a sense of humor. The problem is, she's often the punchline. Ellen Blum is pretty good at convincing herself she is an adult. Despite her difficulties, she's proud of the cred she has earned serenading brides down the aisle with her harp. Doesn't being 27 and paying her rent on time prove she's a grown-up? Not so much, according to her personal chorus of critics. And as she dodges the barbs and petty crimes of her bosses and copes with a family crisis, she feels more like a child than ever. She has her heart set on silencing her critics and teaching them—and maybe herself—a new tune. But becoming more than the person described on her business card is even trickier than moving her harp.
